The Crew - Rb Parkline 2018-04-26

Lavern Martin has ran harvest crews for years, cutting wheat from Texas to Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and Nebraska. Over the years he has met numerous harvesting crews across the country. In that time he has seen families who work together including men and women. He has never seen an all girls hrevet crew. Because of the oil boom which men are working in for great money he has no options so, He hires an all girl crew. He soon finds that supervising girls rather than boys are different. The girls work as hard as boys and complete the job of cutting wheat the same. They are all hard workers who work in the field until the wheat is cut. They do bring with them emotion and a different sense of humor. The crew are five girls who come together to form a bond of friendship though from different backgrounds. Lavern sees a crew for harvesting not two black girls from the city, two white girls who were raised on a farm and know how to work, or the young white girl who has had a troubled life. The five of them see the terror of a tornado which the destructive force is terrifying, to the accident that will test their faith seeing one of their crew hurt. It will be through the laughter, and tears they work for the crabby Lavern who has a heart but hides under his hard driving work ethic. It will be this summer of working in the wheat fields that will prepare them for the adventure of life that lies ahead.

The Mystery of the Invisible Hand - Marshall Jevons 2014-09-07

Fictional sleuth Henry Spearman returns to solve a murder mystery involving art and economics Henry Spearman, the balding economics professor with a knack for solving crimes, returns in The Mystery of the Invisible Hand—a clever whodunit of campus intrigue, stolen art, and murder. Having just won the Nobel Prize, Spearman accepts an invitation to lecture at Monte Vista University. He arrives in the wake of a puzzling art heist with plans to teach a course on art and economics—only to be faced with the alleged suicide of womanizing artist-in-residence Tristan Wheeler. When it becomes clear that Wheeler had serious enemies and a murderer is in their midst, Henry Spearman is on the case. Was Wheeler killed by a jilted lover, a cuckolded husband, or a beleaguered assistant? Could there have been a connection between Wheeler's marketability and his death? From the Monte Vista campus in San Antonio to the halls of Sotheby's in New York, Spearman traces the connections between economics and the art world, finding his clues in monopolies and the Coase conjecture, auction theory, and the work of Adam Smith. What are the parallels between a firm's capital and an art museum's collection? What does the market say about art's authenticity versus its availability?

And what is the mysterious "death effect" that lies at the heart of the case? Spearman must rely on his savviest economic insights to clear up this artful mystery and pin down a killer.

Cruise of the Esmeralda - Harry Collingwood

Book Excerpt: ...tention to other matters, he set himself to the task of seeking for the particulars relating to the buried treasure. But though he patiently examined every document and scrap of paper contained in his father's desk, and otherwise searched most carefully and industriously in every conceivable hiding-place he could think of, the quest was unavailing, and the particulars have never been found, to this day!" "It is very curious," I remarked, when my mother had brought her narrative to a conclusion--"very curious, and very interesting. But what you have related only strengthens my previous conviction, that the document or documents no longer exist. I have very little doubt that, if the truth could only be arrived at, it would be found that Richard Saint Leger kept the papers concealed somewhere about his clothing, and that they were buried with him." "No; that was certainly not the case," rejoined my mother; "for it is distinctly stated that--probably to obviate any such possibility--

Als - Eliot H. Dunsky, M.d. 2016-11-04

Eliot H. Dunsky, MD, is a retired physician who since his diagnosis in 2009 has been living with ALS, the complex, progressively debilitating disorder commonly known as Lou Gehrig's disease. Determined to maintain the best quality of life possible-for as long as possible-he extensively researched the condition and its management. As he immersed himself, talking to ALS patients and exploring emerging assistive technologies and aids, he realized that misunderstanding of this complicated disease was rife, preventing many from making the most of the precious years left. The result is this compilation of not only his personal experiences as his own condition advanced but also current research and links to additional specialized resources. Its aim is to help other patients learn to live with their diagnosis and navigate the day-to-day struggles associated with it. Appropriate symptom management can help fend off the devastating effects of the disease for a longer period of time. ALS: An Orientation offers a practical guide for patients and their families on maximizing quality of life through strategic care and, importantly, coping with the emotional toll the disease can take. A terminal diagnosis simply means savoring to the fullest the life that is still possible.
