Behavioral Problems in Geography Revisited - Kevin R Cox 2015-12-22

This collection of papers, originally published in 1981, reviews and evaluates past and possible future advances in a field of central importance to human geography: behavioral geography. The book includes critical studies which show how the approach has contributed substantially to work within four areas of amjor application in behavioral geography: urban travel behavior, environmental cognition, residential mobility and spatial diffusion. The final section of the book focuses on the shortcomings of the behavioral approach and considers the alternative modes of analysis available.

Notes on High Elevation Research - Donald K. Alford 1965

The ability to operate efficiently under a given environmental condition is a prerequisite for the success of any military operation. Efficient operation presupposes an intimate knowledge of the magnitude of significant environmental features and their effect on men and material. While a great deal of information is presently available on this subject dealing with such diverse environments as polar, desert and tropical there is only limited knowledge of the environment from 14,000 to 18,000 feet and only superficial knowledge of the high alpine environment which exists above 18,000 feet on the earth's surface. That the question of operating in this environment is not wholly academic was demonstrated by the activities of the Indian and Chinese armies at elevations up to 21,000 ft in the Himalayas in 1962. Based upon the assumption that it may become necessary in the future to conduct research into this mountain environment, certain preliminary studies were made in early 1963. This paper presents some of the initial findings.

Afghanistan And The Soviet Union - Milan Hauner 2019-08-26
Since the dramatic events of a decade ago-the revolutions in Kabul and Teheran, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and the Gulf War- "Greater Central Asia" has recaptured the imagination of academia. Historians, Islamicists, anthropologists, political scientists, and defense analysts began to convene conferences and to produce collective volumes that concentrated on two seemingly unrelated subjects: the continuity and strength of ethnocultural patterns in Muslim Central Asia, on the one hand, and the limited range of U.S. military options for defense of the oil-rich Gulf region against hypothetical Soviet invasion, on the other. The contributors to this volume were asked to focus on the long term significance of the junction between Afghanistan and Soviet Eurasia through the "Midlands" region-a relationship that could have wide implications.
